by Paola Mastrocola

Writing is translating: in other words, conveying our thoughts to another person… revealing the secret that is enclosed within us. Translating does not only mean conveying the sense beyond the borders between languages, but also beyond the borders between periods of history.